

Please maintain net neutrality. As a public community college professor, I know that access to a wide variety of internet sources is crucial to the development of critical thinking, and thus, to the continuation of democracy. I do not think I understate the case. We have decimated the book industry, moved most writing online, and created a generation of people who are more able to learn in the digital format than the print format. We utterly depend on free access to quality content, and to the open ability to navigate the web. Please maintain net neutrality. The FCC works for us, not the corporations.
